4	Dublin is an excellent place to live. But many people are concerned that the city is so set on continuing to grow that they will destroy one of the best things about Dublin -- the green space.

268	A
269	"D" for living east of the river. We should have abandoned or area years ago, but we honestly believed the city rhetoric that the area would improve --- almost nothing has changed. Leaving the area is obviously the only way to see change/improvement in our personal enjoyment and long term access to safe water & sewer.

286	B. Good, but people seem to be too busy to take care of their own property let alone respect public property. I know a lot of residents who would like to make improvements, but the approval process is too lengthy and down-right adversarial for those who follow the rules. But doesn't seem to enforce the rules in place, when they aren't followed. Some things are just crazy. Many people have a LOT of trouble with their plumbing because builders are allowed to bypass the garbage disposal when hooking up dishwashers, but then, one has to pay $60 for a permit to replace their air conditioner/furnace, and the only inspector to come was from the gas company! And the discrepancies on fencing !!! That has more holes than the fence ! WE do have a great police department, though, and most shopkeepers are not just businesspeople, they are friends and neighbors.

509	A - Dublin is a great place to live - vibrant, family oriented, near all the shopping, services and restaurants you would ever want; recreation facilities excellent!, green-space and parks (because of ordinances and management) excellent; bike paths excell for ohio, trash and recycling excellent; street and utilities excellent, police dept excellent, and the entrepreneurial center is fine example of how Dublin excels in being the leader in the area is so many ways. Hope I didn't leave anything out, because overall I'd say Dublin does so much right and provides so many services to its residents and those who work int he area. It is resident-activity oriented and is very conscious and plans for preserving environmental features and providing quality living area with open space and historic preservation.
